IN THE NAME OF GOD

FOREWORD

The most important purpose of the Charter of the United Nations is the maintenance of international peace and security, and one of its most important requirements is respect for the sovereignty of States. In today's world, it cannot be argued that the maintenance of international peace and security exclusively applies in armed conflicts and the use of force regimes. That was exactly why the UN General Assembly has also declared cyber-attacks a violation of international peace and security.

Cyber-attacks have been outlawed in General Assembly resolutions, state practices, and the Budapest Convention on Cybercrime. In addition, the principle of good neighborliness (in accordance with Article 74 of the Charter of the United Nations), which is rooted in one of the most fundamental principles of international law, namely respect for the sovereignty of states, does not apply only to states geographically adjacent to each other. This principle does also apply in the context of cyberspace, in which all States all over the world are considered in vicinity of each other.

The terrorist organization of MEK has recently resorted to cyber-attacks against the Islamic Republic of Iran Broadcasting and some other governmental sites and systems, in parallel with its numerous criminal acts. This terrorist organization, which has its headquarters in Europe, carries out these attacks freely and unbridled without any due diligence on behalf of these States.
